The Press and Mexico

From St. Louis Globe-Democrat.
Business men of foreign birth who are living in Mexico removed to that country in good faith, have paid their way, respected the laws, and added much to the wealth of the nation, by enterprise and trained knowledge. They have always yielded obedience to the constituted authorities and kept themselves free from revolutionary movements. These new citizens were invited in and their capital and educated skill were welcomed. Wherever they might go under such circumstances they have a right common to all mankind that can never be forfeited. This right is that of self-defense. If they are driven to emigrate it at the last, were they those who sail it will be taught a lesson that will figure in history.

From Christian Science Daily Monitor, (Boston).
Nine tenths of the capital employed in the activities of Mexico is foreign. The United States has assumed responsibility for good order on these continents by refusing to permit the intervention of any other power. It is under as much obligation to see that Cuba shall go forward. No step in the direction of conquest will be approved or tolerated by the American people, but a step that will insure the peace and welfare of Mexico will be welcomed if taken promptly.

From Springfield (Ohio) Republican.
Freedom of the press was one of the things to be established and guaranteed by men from the United States by the military uprising. In no other single act has the weakness of the present government been more painfully demonstrated than in this indefensible behavior toward a newspaper owned by men from the United States. Nothing better calculated to shake the confidence of the outside world in the stability of president Madero's administration could have been devised.

From St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
Under the conditions he had to deal with, the kind of government maintained was really not a matter of choice with him. Despotism was the price Mexico paid to be saved the destruction of war and the vasty greater losses due to war's paralysis of business. Is it worth the price? It seems to be until the same end can be gained by better means.

From San Antonio Express.
The secrecy which is maintained by the Mexican government is calculated to do it more harm than good, because this mystery is likely to create a suspicion that the condition is worse than it really is. But, aside from this, the government's guarantee of the rights of free speech and free press has been pledged, and the foreigners who have gone to that country trusting in that pledge are entitled to its fulfillment.

From Washington, (D. C.) Post.
President Madero is plainly unable to control the situation in his own country. He has persistently minimized the importance of the revolution, and has persisted that Americans are in no danger. Official reports from Mexico do not bear out the statements of Madero. The situation is fraught with danger and it will not be lessened by mere verbal denials.

From Dallas News.
There are a few more or less positive indications that Gen. Orozco mistook himself for Mexico, and mistook Mexico for it.

From Tucson Citizen.
The Citizen cautions its readers on both sides of the international boundary out to be lulled into indifference to the conditions in Mexico by the narcotics that are daily issued in bulk from the United States. Unfortunately president Madero is not receiving that measure of support from the people which he had a right to expect and not only the United States but all Europe are gravely apprehensive of the result. Large monetary interests which in Mexico and in the border states are endeavoring to honey feed the public about the actual state of affairs in Mexico are sending to Washington through their New York offices more alarming reports than emanate even from the rebel sources of the crisis that they confront the Mexican people. It is altogether probable that president Taft may determine to give the bald facts to the world in a message to congress.
